A Good Record

A General at twenty-eight is the record of Bernard C. Freyberg, V.C., D.S.O., of the West Surrey Regiment, who has been promoted temporary Brigadier-General.
He won his V.C. last year for his gallant leadership of the men of the Royal Naval Brigade at the capture of Beancourt.
On August 6th, 1914, when war was proclaimed, Bernard Freyberg was in Mexico.
He sailed for the old country. After a journey of 8,000 miles by land and sea he was created a lieutenant in the Naval Brigade on August 11st, eight days after landing. They sent him to the Dardanelles. It was an adventure after his own heart. He was awarded the D.S.O. for displaying conspicuous gallantry on April 25, 1915, during the landing operations in the Gulf of Xeros. He swam ashore, towing rifle with flares, and, although alone, reconnoitered the enemy's position and swam back. He was over two hours in the water. It had been decided to send three boatloads of men ashore to light flares and so attract the fire of the Turks. He pointed out to the General that it might be dangerous for who went in the boats, and asked to be allowed to swim across. The swim took about an hour and a half. He had to be careful in picking his spot. It would never have done to have landed in barbed wire. By the greatest care he made his way inland for a distance, more to see how the land lay than anything else, got safely back to the beach, and lit a flare.
"Boom!" went the Turkish gun. But Freyberg had dived into the sea again, and was ploughing his way silently through the ice-cold water. A second time he landed, and a second flare was lit. "Boom!" went the guns again.
For the third time he swam, landed, and lit, and again spoke the same. He had done his work. He had shown the destroyer where the Turkish gunners were and he was not hit at all. The Freyberg family were fighters before "Fry" came into it. His grandfather served with the Russian army at the time of Napoleon's retreat from Moscow and his great-uncle fought at Trafalgar.

Beaver Dam.

The seating capacity of the Beaver Dam School was overtaxed and standing room at a premium at the Sunday service on 'Children's Day.'
The programme consisted of recitations, songs and special selections by the children and young people, followed by a short address by the pastor. Those present expressed themselves as being delighted with the service, and inspired by this service a number of people met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Ingham in the interest of community improvement. The idea was expressed that community life was not all that it might be without a Sunday School, where children and adults might gather and study the problems of life in the light and inspiration of the Bible. It was decided to organize in the following manner: That the service be divided into two divisions, viz., children and adults. That the children's class be taught by Miss Mary Walsh, and a discussion on the lesson for the adults be led by the pastor.
The officers elected were Miss Walsh, teacher of the children; Miss Clara Gimmell, Sec'y.-Treas.; Messrs.
Ingham and Farquharson, Messrs.
Vandellinder and Jesse Havens additional members of the board of management.

Papers will be distributed both interesting and instructive for adults and children.

It is hoped that everyone in the community may turn out next Sunday at 2 o'clock and help to make this worthy institution a great success.

The Squire's Sweetheart

— BY —
KATHARINE TYNANWARD, LOCK & CO., LIMITED
London, Melbourne, and Toronto

Mrs. Bartlett had always been a silent person in his experience of her. Now she talked as though under the influence of excitement.

"Go round the world while you can, sir," she said. "You'll never have a second honeymoon."

The Squire laughed, amused by Mrs. Bartlett's interest in his affairs. With the prospect of getting Dolly away he had resolved to put Countess out of his mind. The man did not belong to Silverdale and it was well known that his brother-in-law heartily tired of his presence. He would have taken his shadow off the place before he and Dolly came back. And if not—he tried his head proudly—he would be able to protect his own.

"You will go with Miss Egerton to London, please, Mrs. Bartlett," he said, "and you will take great care of her for me, for she is very precious. 'Most young ladies would think me a queer old sort of maid,' said Mrs. Bartlett, who reverted at times to her Irish speech. 'Not Miss Egerton. She didn't look at me like as if I was a toad or an eel, and there was nothing but kindness in it. I'll go, sir, and I'll guard her with my life. With the blessing of God I'll keep her safe for you.'"

The Squire put down what seemed the over-emphasis of her speech to an Irish picturesque quality. Of course, she could know nothing.

"You will be making me your debtor," he said gently; and was embarrassed by the fervor of the answer.

"Sure wouldn't I lay down my life to please you, sir?"

The next day, Dolly Egerton, accompanied by Mrs. Bartlett, heavily veiled, went up to London, taking the sunshine out of Silverdale for her lover.

CHAPTER XIV.

The Continental Express

It was now September, and the leaves had begun to turn yellow and drop from the boughs in Kensington Gardens, where Dolly and Mrs. Bartlett liked to walk, unless the Squire was in town, when he was Dolly's companion.

The wedding was fixed for the first week in October. Dolly was getting her trousseau. Lady Leyes, a tall, beautiful young widow, had come to the studios, and had taken a violent dislike to the new soft radiance of Dolly and Lionel Egerton, to his wife's obvious annoyance, had discovered that Dolly needed an outfit for her marriage, and had fished up a twenty-pound note and put it into Dolly's hand, closing her fingers tightly upon it.

It was wonderful how far the twenty pounds went in Lady Leyes's experienced hands. She saw to it that Dolly had a modest but pretty trousseau, excellent of its kind, which could be supplemented in Paris, where the bride would have plenty of money to play with, and the Squire should have reached his seventh heaven in paying his wife's bills.

The twenty pounds was certainly wonderfully elastic. Dolly was too busily in love to be very curious over the details of her trousseau, although she delighted in the pretty things, fingering them with her most rapturous and dreamy expression on her face. The wedding gown, of plain black, white silk, simply made, was Lady Leyes's gift to the bride, and the wedding breakfast was to be given at her house in St. James Street.

As the time of the wedding drew near her ladyship, who was accustomed to having her own way, was very anxious to carry Dolly off to St. James Street. But Dolly preferred to stay, and the Squire guessed the reason and sympathized with it. At Alice Leyes's house Dolly would have been caught into a whirl. Lady Leyes was restless—must always be doing something—and had a finger in every social and philanthropic pie of fashionable London. Whereas Dolly, taking her happiness quietly, seemed to have a need for a passionate contemplation. She had developed a gift, she said to her lover, for sitting quietly doing nothing in particular, only contemplating the wonderful thing God had given her. The queer expression was gone from her face. She was alert, light-stepping, like a flame of joy.

It was obvious that the two lovers stood on the plane of felicity. Mrs. Bartlett, going about very quietly, cooking in the absurd little kitchen of the studios instead of having cooked food sent in from Barkers, Harrods or the Stores, as the other studioites did, washing up in the miniature scullery, used to grow heart-warm thinking upon their happiness. She loved the Squire like his dog, and as he complained, took a proportionately exaggerated view of her indifference to him. She had accepted Dolly first for the Squire's sake, afterwards for her own. Dolly had always looked at her as though she found her pleasant to look upon, and had so unlocked the floor of the poor disgraced, once pretty woman's heart.

Mrs. Bartlett, closely veiled, did wonders in the way of marketing. She was a born cook, and she had the French dexterity in buying and recklessness when it was a question of the proper ingredient. She compounded wonderful things in marmalades and casseroles for the delectation of the lovers, while she said to herself, with a half-timid humor, that they would not know a vol-au-vent from sawdust, all things being the same to their absorption in each other.

Dolly gave humorous accounts to her Squire of the marketing expeditions she went on with Mrs. Bartlett, who was Kate to her by this time. She would go into the smart Kensington shops, and not only select infinitesimal portions of this, that and the other thing, and insist on having them, but would attempt to beat down the prices and sometimes succeed.

"Glory to goodness; miss, you wouldn't be giving them what they ask!" was her incredulous remark on the first occasion she had gone marketing with Dolly, before she had taken over the entire responsibility. "Hand me five that, young man," she would say to an assistant in a big shop, "but the price will be one and six instead of two and six. I wasn't born yesterday." And very often she succeeded in getting the thing she wanted at a substantial reduction.

Dolly explained that these bargains, although humorous, were somewhat embarrassing for her. There came a morning when she positively refused to accompany Kate. The Squire was arriving in the afternoon and Kate was doing something special in the way of an evening meal, even while she complained that it was all wasted on Miss Dolly and Mr. Meyrick.

Unwillingly, at last she left Dolly sitting by the Round Pond in Kensington Gardens with a sketch book in her hand while she went in search of some of the things she needed. She dealt in one shop for one thing, at another for a second, and so on, and she made Dolly laugh by telling her that bacon at one shop was fatter than a pound of butter than at another, and just as good. Dolly was not sure sometimes that Kate did not tell her such things to make her laugh. Dolly happy had a laughter that was worth capturing. The Squire found himself lying in wait for it since she had been his, and the old discontented, over-clouded Dolly changed to something joyous and young. Never now did he see in her face that strange air of listening which he remembered with a cold chill at his heart. Her eyes had no mist over them now. He said to himself happily that his love had escaped that evil influence over her life. The power of the wicked had been broken. She had come out of the shadows that lay thickly about her in the early days when he knew her first.

Neglecting the Bible

Quite apart from its moral and religious bearings, the neglect of the Bible involves a cultural handicap worth noting. It involves a cramping of the popular vocabulary, as no other literary masterpiece is such a well of English pure and unadorned. It involves a dulling of literary perceptions, as literature abounds in Biblical allusions which every reader of the Bible instantly understands, but which only readers of the Bible ever can. Finally, it involves a failure to respond to many a good joke, an astonishing percentage of the best jokes are nothing more or less than Biblical allusions.—Chicago Tribune.

"Ma, I can tell you all about the calories in our food—"

"No, you can't, Mary Jane. There isn't a 'no' in the name. The man keeps everything in his store covered up."

"How are you getting on with the speech you were going to deliver?"

"Fine," replied Senator Sorghum. "I've found so many things I can leave out without spoiling the sense that maybe I won't deliver it at all."

"Does your husband play cards for money?"

"Yes, but he's just as big a failure in that as he is in business."

Well-Known Firm Is Giving Away Free Samples for the Asking

There are many remedies for various ills placed upon the market, some of which enjoy wide-spread reputations, built upon their proven worth; while the popularity of others is but transient. When one is ill, there is a strong disinclination to experiment, and the wise man or woman will usually make use of a remedy that has an established reputation. There is perhaps no better known or more reputable firm of manufacturing chemists than that of Dr. Cassell's Co., Ltd., Manchester, England. Particularly patent with this statement he is those who have come to Canada from the mother country. Dr. Cassell's Tablets is not a new remedy nor experiment, but one of proven worth. Many famous physicians' testimonials bear ample verification to this fact.

Although this sterling remedy is well-known to the majority of the people, yet to those who have not put it to the test, the proprietors will gladly send a free sample on receipt of five cents to cover cost of mailing and postage.

In writing for the free sample, address correspondence to Harold E. Ritchie & Co., Ltd., 10 McCaul Street, Toronto. Dr. Cassell's Tablets are most highly recommended in the treatment of Dyspepsia, Kidney Troubles, Sleeplessness, Anemia, Nervous Affections, Nerve Paralysis, Pimples and weakness in children. The reader who may be suffering can do better than write at once to the above address and secure a generous sample package of this steadily enjoyed remedy without cost.

"Yes, but he's just as big a failure in that as he is in business."

Electric Plants for the Farm

Small Equipments Save Much Labor on the Farm and in the Farm Home

One of the recognized necessities in connection with our increased agricultural production is better and more attractive conditions on the farm, and among the many suggestions the use of electricity should be considered. Electric power is a great convenience in the farm home, and saves much time to the farm help. The farm or country home situated within the area of electric system of transmission or distribution is fortunate, but the vast majority must look to the small isolated plant.

This alternative, however, is now much more promising than a few years ago. Many factories manufacture this type of equipment, the operation of the plants has been simplified and cost has been much reduced. These small plants may be advantageously used for many domestic purposes in addition to lighting, such as ironing, washing, toasting, pumping water, etc.; and also for the very important use of charging storage batteries.

There are a number of these small plants now on the Canadian market, ranging in size from 175 watts, and costing $300 upward. Six different types were described in a recent electrical magazine, some using storage batteries in conjunction, and general use of a gasoline engine as a prime mover. They are usually operated at a very low voltage. These small plants are perfectly safe, so far as the handling of the electric energy is concerned.—L. G. D.

Show Day Will Soon be Here

Are you going to the show? Is what everybody is saying to each other these pleasant days, and the show they mean is the Cooper Bros. Railroad Shows and Trained Animal Exhibition, which will exhibit at Crossfield, on Tuesday, August 7th, afternoon and night, rain or shine, under acres of waterproof tents. All new this year, with new acts, features and wonders from all parts of the world. The show that is different and without doubt the most moral, high-class amusing and educational exhibition that will visit the town for some time. There is a fascination about a tented show that appeals to everybody. Makes the children happy and takes the older folk back to their childhood days. The blare of the brass bands the trumpeting of the elephants, and the roar of the lions, the funny clowns with their central donkeys, and with the gaily dressed performers makes this a big holiday for all. Lay away your cares for a time and come prepared for enjoyment. Cooper Bros. programme is made up with high-class European novelties and horses, ponies, dogs, monkeys, goats and elephant acts, and acrobatic acts, with a dozen or so of foolish and ludicrous comic acts by an army of funny clowns help to make up the two hours and a quarter programme of Cooper Bros. show. Also an innovation is being presented this year by the Yvettes, the human butterflies; Madame Bretina and her beautiful white horse and dogs in magnificent statuary displays, a pictorial delight, depicting the following: Military Attention, Home Sweet Home, Peace, Love, Statue of Liberty and Hunting Horn. These and many other features will be seen only with Cooper Bros. show. Hear the $5,000 pneumatic air pipe organ. Bring the mother, sweetheart, or wife and children and have a big time, for this will be a gala day for all.

Hold your horses, the elephants are coming.

The following names of local pupils who sat at the Departmental Examinations in Grade VIII, appeared as having passed: M. C. Gimmell, Ellen Gimmell, Thekla Hultgren, C. Potter, George Potter, Grace Vance, H. Whittaker, L. P. Larson, Chas. Purvis.
